

Do you think plastic surgery will make you pretty easily? Wrong! Plastic surgery is the new moral dilemma of this era. Maybe the girl you make fun of next time could think of doing this. Or, maybe you will be pushed by the negativity around you to do this. Someone who you believed to have been happy could potentially take this decision. With the world becoming more and more directed to technology and other body marketing strategies – it is obviously a demanding issue to think about whether plastic surgery should be for beauty. Let me introduce myself, I am Townim Faisal, your course mate. I am here to urge you why I am against the recreational use of plastic surgery and why people should only use it when they really need it. Thus, let us learn why doing plastic surgery may bring more social harm than good. Plastic surgery, in the most basic introduction, can cause people to detest or even question the confidence of the one who did it. Plastic surgery, for people who had acid burns, is a blessing. But, to those who hadn't, but still had plastic surgery, they may get a nasty word– "Plastic." There are many examples; like Karl Lagerfeld, a notable fashion icon, had stated that "Nothing makes you look older than attempting to look young." Another example, Jennifer Hawkins, an actress, has also come under fire for her use of cosmetic surgery, such as Botox, both according to Sydney Morning Herald. If you think some miracle surgery will make you pretty– I am certain that you may be wrong. Instead of building your confidence, you may break it! Now let us focus on the medical side of things. Plastic surgery is a very advanced side of surgery. And for something with that much complexity, there are some mistakes, and it does not always meet expectations. For instance, Sharilene Cedeno ~~was~~ a 23-year-old who had lost her life to plastic surgery complications. And, in 2014, Rachel Hutchinson had died due to fluid buildup, both according to The Guardian. Plastic surgery is something like a terrible tattoo. Imagine, carrying the deformed image of your fiancé for the rest of your life! But this mistake might even kill you! (CON) Many people may say that, the statistics of danger are low, and it boosts personal confidence. That may be true to a certain degree. Nevertheless, what are your chances that you are not going to live forever with a deformed shape? It may be that, some people around you are going to be negative about you. But instead of body positivity, I ask you to think, isn't mental positivity even stronger? In that case, I would suggest people talk to their loved ones, their family members, about whether this change will truly give you a new definition. As we have seen so far, recreational plastic surgery affects you and your society. In the beginning, I have stressed how plastic surgery may bring negative social impact, and the medical disasters that take place are numerous. Although it may get a positive change, shouldn't the mentality be stronger? Maybe one day, one of your siblings or your best friends would come to you and ask you that he or she wants to change his or her face, wants to be someone that other people would accept. Would it not be better to explain, why changing the mindset is more vital than changing the appearance? So in short, although some of you might think that you need to change, I insist you to think, and then, make a decision, because surely there are others who are in such dire condition. Would it not be like buying a wheelchair while being able to run?
